CLARE'S REVENGE

He had felt inclined to pity this woman, who might, for all her vulgar beauty and bright, beseeching eyes, be mad and not accountable for her actions. Fielding, she said, "Mr. Armstrong wishes to have a few words with you and Mrs. Raymond if you can spare the time."

"But now anger got the better of his tender heart. Heaven! If her words were believed by others! May, almost his wife now, would be taken from him! Alas and loathing took the place of compassion for the beautiful stranger. He shook her off roughly."

"I have had enough of this," he said, in a hard, cold voice which May Fielding would have found it difficult to recognize as his. "I have given you every information, and offered more than most people would to a stranger. I will listen to no more."

And he strode quickly away. The woman remained only one moment on her knees when she had poured forth her earnest entreaties, and then sprang to her feet.

She, too, had changed, and no one seeing that change would have for an instant imagined her to be an impostor. She had never from the first appeared to be so.

Her manner had been resolute and tranquil. "So my dream of happiness is over," she said, speaking aloud in the silence of those solemn woods. "I had hoped that my letter was but the outcome of some sudden resolve. I could not believe that I had really abandoned me to my fate, after all my protestations after our years of love after the birth of our child! But I will not dwell in my misery. Not I must go now to the bitter end for my little boy's sake."

And with these words she strode away after him. She had scarcely disappeared when another figure appeared on the scene, that of Clare Raymond.

She looked white and scared, and her left hand was pressed over her bosom as if in pain.

"Fool that I am," she murmured. "Even now, when Fate is working for me in every way, I seem to have come to work things to my own use. What shall I do next? How unravel this tangled skein without assistance? And yet my revenge will be but a poor one after all. If he is married, all is lost! May Fielding will suffer bitterly; but, alas, she shall live!"

Even as she spoke a loud, shrill cry echoed through the woods, a cry as of a child in pain. Clare gave a start, looked round, hesitated a moment, and then, brave at heart, plunged into the thick plantation where the two had disappeared and followed them.

An influx of visitors had prevented the proposed party, and Clare Raymond, impatient of disappointment, and with a mind inflamed by resentment, had slipped on her waking tricks and quitted the house.

Never for one moment had she imagined that any discovery was awaiting her in Lockley woods.

But fate plays strange tricks. She chose that way as if impelled to do so against her will, for it was not a favorite walk of hers.

And she had found—what? The time passed rapidly for a moment. Mrs. Raymond had a headache, and Clare was pale, silent and altogether "mysterious and stupid," as May told her laughingly.

After dinner Mrs. Raymond went to sleep in a capacious chair in the drawing room. Clare occupied the pages of a novel, and May, pretending to do so likewise, lay on a couch idling with her book and looking up every five minutes at the hands of the clock which ticked so softly, so aggravatingly slowly, as she thought, on the mantelpiece.

Guy had promised to spend two hours with them that night; his usual time was half past eight when he did not come to dinner, and at the lodge was served punctually at five.

It was now half past six. "What can be keeping Guy?" cried May at last, fidgeting and impatiently. "He was never late before."

Clare glanced over at the speaker with a look which May could not fail to see. It was a strange look, half pity, half triumph.

"Old and unaccountable things happen sometimes," she said. "You see, Guy said he was going to Rochester on business, and it may be some very tedious task he imagined. No doubt we shall have news of him soon."

There was a knocking ring in her voice, and a mocking light in her eyes as she spoke, which was intensely irritating to May.

"What is the matter, Clare?" cried the young girl. "You speak so oddly and look so oddly, one would imagine that you were the depository of some weighty secret in regard to Guy, though I should scarcely think he would choose you for such a person."

She spoke with an irritability quite foreign to her nature, but she felt annoyed by Clare's manner and her words.

"Well, it would certainly not be likely while her majesty the brideless wife is in the house," she said, laughing. "But, really, you must learn to be reasonable. Guy may just about be going to your aunt, Sirs, but mark me, they are not in the world to put the theory into practice."

May was about to make a somewhat angry reply, when a loud ring sounded at the hall door, followed by an impatient knock.

"That is not Guy's ring or knock," cried May, springing up with a somewhat pale face.

of the mind, such as she had never experienced before. Foolish, she told herself she was to be so afraid, she yet listened intently.

She heard a strong, grave voice, which she recognized at once as that of Mr. Paul Armstrong, the family selector.

Then the servant came hurrying across the wide, dimly lighted hall.

"Miss Fielding," she said, "Mr. Armstrong wishes to have a few words with you and Mrs. Raymond if you can spare the time."

"Ask Mr. Armstrong to come in at once," said May, in a calm voice, though her bosom was pulsing with the wild beatings of her heart; and hurrying across to her guardian she awakened her from her sleep.

Mrs. Raymond was by no means heavy headed, and she very quickly realized that a visitor had arrived and was desirous of speaking with her.

By the time that Paul Armstrong entered the room, tall, white haired, florid and kind of manner, she was fully awake and received him gracefully.

The lawyer sat down near her. He was usually quite at his ease, as a man of the world ought to be, but on this occasion he was just the reverse.

He took out his pocket handkerchief, wiped his forehead, and then, though eager to tell his news, subsided into the merest commonplace.

"Quite unpleasantly hot walking," he said, with a sorry apology for a smile.

"Yes, it must be," said Clare, helping him on, "especially if you are bearing any of the news which has caused you to hurry."

"Well, that is just it, you see," said Paul Armstrong, struggling back into his professional composure. "I am the bearer of news and very bad news, and I wish any one else save myself had had the task of bringing it here. However, Guy—Mr. L'Estrange—desired me to should be so, and his word is law to me."

May looked at him with eyes full of terror.

"Guy asked you to come?" she said. "O, pray, Mr. Armstrong, do explain! Suppose is far worse than the truth, believe me! Tell me, has any accident befallen him?"

"He took her hand and gazed at her wistful face kindly.

"You must be brave, Miss Fielding," he said, "for my news is very bad. Mr. L'Estrange is alive and well, but he is in some trouble; he has been arrested—now calm yourself, Miss Fielding, for all is bound to come right—on a charge of attempted murder!"

May uttered a gasping cry. Could this be such a most hideous dream? Guy—her Guy, her betrothed husband—arrested on so foul a charge? It seemed impossible.

At first the world seemed swimming round with her, then, catching sight of a look on Clare's face which she had never seen before—a look of malignant triumph—she roused herself.

"Do not all, Mr. Armstrong," she said, "I will not interrupt you again. Briefly then he narrated what had happened in the woods; the claim which the strange woman had made upon him; his hurried departure home and the subsequent finding of the woman in the wood, severely wounded."

"But that all?" asked May, clasping and unclasping her hands, and looking at them with wild, staring eyes. "Did he send me a message?"

"Ay, that he did, my dear," said Paul Armstrong, placing his hand on her shoulder and bending over her tenderly. "He bade you to be of good cheer, for all would be well; that you were to believe in him; innocent of everything that he had never seen the woman before in all his life, and that no blow from him had struck her, and that so long as May thinks me innocent," he said, "I can bear up through all."

"I think I will go to my room," stammered May, attempting to rise.

But the effort was too much for her; as she rose the room seemed to turn round with her, and she fell insensible into the lawyer's arms.

With this she fainted, and a servant, Mrs. Raymond contrived, after a few moments, to bear the fainting girl to her room, from which Clare quickly returned.

"This story has proved a terrible shock to her," Mr. Armstrong, she said, "though it is as well she heard it as she thought from your lips. She must have learned the facts to-morrow, and, perhaps, not in so delicate a way."

The shrewd lawyer, accustomed to read character, had not passed unobserved the strange look which had crossed Clare's face as he was telling his tale, and he said, "Your opinion of it all, Miss Raymond?"

TO OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

Get the news and get all the news and nothing but the news—From Dan's Celebrated Maxims in Journalism.

A FEW FACTS FOR THE FARMER.

There are two papers published in New York City for sale, one of which is only one cent. The American Mail and Express Journal, which can only be obtained from a foreign country, and the other is The Engineering and Mining Journal, which is not sold in this country, but can be obtained by any person writing for it. These papers give the prices of farming implements made for American mills, as sold in this country and abroad, and in all cases the retail prices for foreign countries are lower than the wholesale prices for American dealers. Mr. Lindquist, of Cornell University, has tabulated many thousand of these discount sheets, and for the benefit of the considerate farmer, we mention a few of the articles used by him and the price he has to pay compared with that paid by foreigners.

CULTIVATORS, PROVIDED 45 PER CENT.

Home Foreign
 Wheel hoe cultivator, $11.00 $ 8.40
 All steel cult' with wheel, $ 8.00 $ 5.60

BAKERS AND TROUBADOURS PROVIDED 45 PER CENT.

Chieftain hay tedder, $50.00 $35.00
 Lock lever scow, 15.00 11.25

PLUMBERS PROVIDED 45 PER CENT.

Chilled nine-inch cut, $ 5.00 $ 3.04
 Two-gang plows, 58.80 52.92

MOVIES PROVIDED 45 PER CENT.

Cut steel per hour, $ 8.00 $ 5.60

All other "protected" goods in proportion.

The foreigner pays no more freight than the American; sea rates are cheap. The protectionists presume to say this, but it is not so. It is denied. It is no theory, but stubborn facts with which the farmer can acquaint himself if he will send twenty-five cents to the Engineering and Mining Journal for a copy of the Export and Import Tariff. He will find in some foreign country send him one of these papers. If this is strictly legitimate, and if these will owners are wanting protection for their farmer, why this secrecy? Why are these papers not sent out to the American farmers. These mill owners hire politicians to go about telling the American farmer how much they are interested in his welfare, while they are retelling to foreigners 25 to 40 per cent, cheaper than they sell at wholesale to the dealers who supply them with the goods. When will our farmers learn that they can't afford to protect these sharks who are so directly opposed to the farming interests of our country? Let every farmer who wishes to sell his himself in regard to these facts take a man's word, but study the foreign advertisements of the mill owners themselves.

THE REPUBLICANS OF BRECKENRIDGE COUNTY.

are so bitterly opposed to primary elections and who denounce every one held by the Democrats here, should read the following notice of the Republican in a county where their own party resorts to the very same method of choosing a candidate, and it is shown that their conduct is ten times worse than anything that has been done here among the Democrats in a primary election. The Republican thus describes the recent primary of its party:

"Men were bought, paid, and the money paid was given to the men in plain view of everybody. Numbers of white and black men unblushingly offered themselves to the highest bidder. Prices were sold throughout the day, ranging from $1 to $4, according to the size, age and condition of the voter and the humor of the buyer. Some choice fellows who undertook to ball the market were bought at $15 and $16, and were regarded as cheap at that. Whiskey was used in the greatest profusion and there were fully 100 drunken men on the streets. Decent respectability was completely disgusted and a great many declared that they would never go into another primary unless it was regulated by law."

The readers of the BRECKENRIDGE NEWS will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Catarrh is the most positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional medicine. Such as the Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by restoring the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.
